1 DESCRIBING UNUSUAL DESTINATIONS

Naila: Have you and Daniel decided where you're going on your honeymoon?

Sarah: As a matter of fact, we have. We made reservations at a hotel in Key Largo, Florida. We'll stay there for a couple of nights, and then we're going to disappear underwater.

Naila: What do you mean disappear?

Sarah: We're going to spend three nights in an underwater inn.

Naila: An underwater inn? You're joking, right?

Sarah: No, I'm serious. They've got a small hotel 21 feet below sea level down there. You can scuba-dive all day long, or you can hang out in your room and watch the fish go by. And if you want to be pampered a little, you can hire a "mer-chef" to prepare gourmet meals for you.

Naila: Wow. That sounds so interesting and ... different. I've never heard of such a thing.

Sarah: Neither had we until one of our scuba-diving friends told us about it. Since we both love the ocean so much, we thought: Why not?

Talking about exotic trips and activities

2 The lure of faraway places

- Where did you go on your trip?
- We went to Bhutan.
- That sounds exotic. I don't even know where that is.
- It's a tiny country in the Himalayas, next to Nepal.
- Was it hard to get to?
- Yes, it's very remote, and travel there is restricted. They only let in a few tourists every year. We planned our trip two years in advance.

4 City mice and country mice

Some people prefer an urban travel experience. They like the events, the culture, and the excitement that big cities offer. Such travelers like to eat in nice restaurants, stay in comfortable hotels, and go to plays, museums, and art galleries.

Other travelers don't mind roughing it. They'd rather be out in the middle of nowhere than in a place where there are a lot of people. Adventure tours offer opportunities to experience remote places and unusual activities.

Describing an adventure tour

10 The trip of a lifetime!

- How was your trip to Africa?
- Fantastic! It was the trip of a lifetime.
- Did you make it to the top of Mt. Kilimanjaro?
- Yes, all four of us, but barely.
- What do you mean?
- Between the jet lag and the altitude sickness, we really had a difficult time of it.
- Did you see a lot of wildlife?
- Not much during the climb, but later we went to Ngorongoro Crater, and there were animals everywhere. If I hadn't seen them with my own eyes, I wouldn't have believed it — lions, hyenas, elephants, cheetahs, giraffes — it was incredible.
- I guess you took lots of pictures, then.
- I sure did. I was surprised how close you could get to some of the animals. I took a picture of a sleeping lion that was only about 10 meters away!

11 A Climber's Journal

April 23

We're now four days into our 6-day hike up Kilimanjaro. The day started out partly cloudy and cool. Our goal today was to reach Barafu Camp at 4,000 meters.

The morning was difficult. Not a steep climb, but hard because we are still coping with the effects of the altitude. When discussing it with our guide, I referred to "acute mountain sickness." He smiled and said, "You mean ordinary mountain sickness, don't you?" I guess that means the headaches aren't going away anytime soon.

We left the forested area a couple of days ago. Now we are high and dry, not far from the glaciers and cliffs above. The views from up here are spectacular.

After lunch, we climbed steadily for an hour to Lava Tower. Then a steep descent — more like rock climbing than hiking. Finally, a long back-and-forth trail that led to the edge of a deep canyon. We reached camp totally exhausted after nine hours and about ten miles of hiking. We'll start the final ascent tomorrow night. I hope we'll have a clear night with a full moon to light our way.

1 ASKING ABOUT APPROPRIATE BEHAVIOR

Cynthia: My company is sending me to Argentina and Brazil next week to meet with some of our clients. Do you have any tips on how to act — you know, appropriate behavior? This is my first time there, and I don't want to embarrass anybody — including myself.

Pauline: Well, South Americans are very friendly and warm, but they dress and behave a little less casually than we do here. You know, Americans are considerably less formal than people in most other countries.

Cynthia: I've heard that people there don't like to talk about business when they first meet you — that they'd rather wait to get to know you a little bit first. Is that true?

Pauline: Yes, it is. If you're invited for dinner or a social gathering, don't bring up business until you sense the time is right.

Cynthia: OK, but how will I know when that is?

Pauline: Well, you'll definitely know if the host brings up the subject himself!

Talking about business etiquette

2 How should I introduce them?

- I'm bringing some people into the office tomorrow. They'd like to meet everyone from the CEO on down. What's the proper etiquette in such a situation? How should I introduce them?
- Well, the rule of thumb is to introduce people of lower rank to people of higher rank. But wait a minute. Who is it that's visiting?
- Oh, they're clients, or at least potential clients.
- Then forget what I just said. In business, the client comes first.
- Let me make sure I've got this straight. I say: Mr. or Ms. Client, I'd like you to meet our CEO, our division manager, and so on.
- That's right. You say the clients' names first. That's the most respectful way.

3 Social vs. business etiquette

Social etiquette in Western societies is based on chivalry, a code of conduct from medieval times. An important principle of chivalry is that the stronger members of society protect and accommodate the weaker members. Since women were traditionally considered in need of protection, men would open doors for them, push their chairs in when they sat down, and help them on with their coats. Today, however, many women consider this condescending.

way to behave

Business etiquette, on the other hand, developed from a military tradition and is based on a hierarchy of power. Depending on your position within an organization, people are above you (your superiors), at the same level (your peers), or under you (your subordinates).

In a business environment, a person defers to his superiors. However, within each level, men and women are considered equal. It is not necessary for a woman to defer to a male colleague or vice versa.

In a business hierarchy, the people in power give the orders. Of course, in order to maintain good relations, everyone in the organization should treat each other with courtesy and respect.

9 Putting one's best foot forward

It is undeniable that a person's appearance greatly affects the first impressions that others have of him or her. In any situation, a person dressed inappropriately will not be taken very seriously. Knowing what is appropriate is key.

ARGENTINA: formal The Argentines have adopted British traditions towards clothing, usually wearing formal, conservative outfits, even in many social situations. Foreign business executives visiting Argentina should do likewise.

FRANCE: stylish; best quality As one would expect, the inventors of haute couture put a premium on style. Even low-paid, entry-level executives buy the best clothes they can afford. Unlike in the USA, businessmen in France do not usually loosen their ties or take off their jackets in the office. French women are famous for their feminine chic: a smart suit and good shoes are a must.

U.K.: custom tailoring In the past a gentleman wore well-made, but well-worn clothes. Today, only academics wear old clothes. British business executives are likely to have a new, custom-tailored wardrobe, though conservative styles are still preferred. English weather is often cold and wet. One of the reasons tweed is so popular in England is that it is both warm and comparatively water-resistant.

BRAZIL: casual, but stylish Style is the most important factor in Brazilian dress. Well-cut, fashionable clothing is expected of Brazilian executives. Many male executives forego neckties. Keep in mind, however, that Brazil is very large, and the degree of casualness varies from city to city. Rio de Janeiro is more casual than São Paulo, which itself is more casual than Brasília.

10 The Etiquette of the Internet

Every community has its own set of customs and codes of behavior. The on-line community is no different. One key distinction: What is etiquette to the world at large is Netiquette on the Internet. When it comes to e-mail, some commonly accepted codes of conduct include —

DO ...

- Keep your correspondence short. Busy people may not take time to read long messages.
- Check your e-mail at least twice a day so you can respond in a timely manner.
- If you're going to be away for several days, use the feature that lets people know when you will return.

DON'T ...

- Assume that anything you send will not be read by others. Many people have access to your e-mail.
- Copy your colleagues on matters that don't concern them. Unnecessary "cc-ing" is a waste of their time.
- Use all caps in a message. IT'S LIKE SHOUTING.

11 Abbreviations in e-mail

Abbreviations have always been common in the business world. With the widespread use of e-mail, it's becoming common practice to abbreviate any well-known fixed phrase.

12 Abbreviated emotions

Young people who have come of age in the Internet era have developed short-cuts for communicating on line. Besides the many abbreviations they use to make their messages short, they also use "emoticons" as a quick way to share reactions.

:~) smiling; agreeing	:~o surprised
:-(frowning; sad	:~O very surprised
:~I indifferent	8~O "Unbelievable!"

1 DISCUSSING AN URBAN DILEMMA

Vanessa: Do you live close to the office, Alberto?

Alberto: No. Unfortunately I live way out in the suburbs about thirty miles from here.

Vanessa: How long is your commute?

Alberto: It depends on the traffic. The morning trip is usually easier. If I leave my house by 7:00, I can get in by 8:00. In the evenings, the traffic can be really awful. A couple of times, it's taken me more than two hours to get home.

Vanessa: Why don't you move closer to work?

Alberto: You know, when we were looking for a house, we tried to find something closer, but everything near the city was much more expensive. So we decided to buy the place in Oakton and put up with a longer commute.

Vanessa: That's the trade-off, isn't it? Live close and pay —

Alberto: Or live farther away and drive.

Describing Urban Problems

2 Living in metropolitan areas

TRAFFIC CONGESTION

Too many cars and buses clog streets and highways in urban areas. Heavy traffic flow creates traffic jams at major intersections and bottlenecks on highways.

EXPENSIVE HOUSING / OVERCROWDING

Because of the population density in urban areas, housing is usually expensive. Lack of affordable housing for low-income residents leads to overcrowding as large numbers of people are forced to live in units designed for only a few people.

AIR POLLUTION

Factories and moving vehicles such as cars and trucks emit large quantities of pollutants. This pollution often gets trapped in the air over urban areas creating smog.

SPRAWL

The population of urban areas increases, and more and more land around the city is developed. As a result of unchecked growth, suburbs spread and housing sprawls across the landscape.

NOISE

Big cities are very noisy places. Noise in urban areas comes from traffic, sirens from emergency vehicles, airplanes landing at large airports, car alarms, and many other sources. Excess noise can have a detrimental effect on the mental and physical health of city residents.

6 World's most "livable" cities

Every year, Mercer Human Resource Consulting, one of the world's leading consulting organizations, conducts a survey on the quality of life in more than 250 major cities of the world. The survey looks at political, social, economic, and environmental factors, as well as issues of personal safety and health, schools and education, transportation, recreation, and housing. In 2003, the rankings of the most livable cities, by region, were as follows:

EUROPE

1. Zurich, Switzerland
2. Vienna, Austria
3. Geneva, Switzerland
4. Copenhagen, Denmark
4. Frankfurt, Germany

SOUTH / CENTRAL AMERICA

8 California and the Car Culture

It is the signature image of California, Southern California, especially. The shoulder-to-shoulder, bumper-to-bumper car culture. A place where the car has long been king and the daily commute the stuff of urban legend, where motorists like Rich Kassabian are modern-day road warriors: "In miles we're looking at like 190 and in hours we're looking at three. And that's the best-case scenario," he says about his round-trip commute.

It's a culture that thrives in San Francisco where drivers fill their cars with absolute strangers, so they can take the carpool lane home. No talking, smoking, or cell phones allowed. But nowhere is it on greater display than on California's seemingly endless freeways. Those sprawling monuments to democracy, where everyone is equal at any speed. California writer Celeste Fremon: "Washington has the White House and the Washington monument. Paris has the Eiffel Tower, and Venice has its canals. But the symbol, the architectural symbol of L.A. is its freeway system."

©2004 The New Yorker Collection: from Cartoonbank.com. All Rights Reserved.

"Transportation in the automobile was one of the ways California envisioned itself. Invented itself," explains historian and California state librarian Kevin Starr. "California grew up alongside the automobile. The population of the state went from a mere three million people, when the automobile was introduced, to 35 million people today."

"Californians' mind-set in general is this free spirit. It's a cliché, but it's true. And people really love their cars," says Frank Saucedo, director of General Motors' California design studio.

Back on the freeway, there's Rich Kassabian and his three-hour daily commute, who is a daily witness to life in the not-so-fast lane. Says Kassabian: "I've seen people brushing their teeth. I've seen people shaving. I've seen people putting on makeup." There's much to see in the car culture. Where else but California can you see artists altering freeway signs into something understandable because they're tired of getting lost. But there may be limits, even for the car culture. Historian Kevin Starr: "We're seeing an acknowledgment that the era of freeways is over. The era of freeways represented the height of modernism of general, heroically scaled solutions to transportation problems. That is over. There isn't enough money."

The era of limits has begun. Symbolized by a turn to mass transit. And a return to an old sense of community. "The Hollywood freeway was built to take 120 thousand drivers. We're up to nearly 350 thousand a day. Obviously that's ridiculous. Perhaps the overcrowding of freeways is helping push us in the direction of real community, of having to look each other in the eye and not have a windshield in between," says historian Kevin Starr.

9 Can ITS cure congestion?

Intelligent Transportation Systems (ITS) is a growing worldwide movement to use recent developments in communications technology to improve transportation within and between cities. Though still in its early stages, numerous ITS projects have already demonstrated its potential to reduce congestion and bring about efficiencies in the transportation system. Here are some examples of what ITS can do:

- Coordinate traffic signal operations. Signals can be linked to improve traffic flow over a large area, such as a major metropolitan region.
- Detect and clear accidents. Automated systems can detect accidents immediately and alert the appropriate emergency services, allowing them to respond more quickly.
- Provide traffic information in real time to travelers. Drivers can obtain up-to-the-second information on traffic, weather, and road conditions.
- Eliminate the need for driving. At some point, people may travel on "smart highways" that carry them along at maximum speed while they sit and enjoy the scenery.

1 DISCUSSING ONE'S HEALTH

Julian: I am so out of shape.

Roger: What do you mean "out of shape"? You look pretty fit to me.

Julian: Unfortunately, scales don't know how to lie. I've gained a lot of weight since I started at Spectrum last October. I work late, I eat out most nights — the restaurant meals are killing me.

Roger: What about exercise? Don't you exercise regularly?

Julian: I used to be in the gym four nights a week, but I've let that slip. When you leave work at 8:00, 8:30, it's hard to get motivated to exercise.

Roger: Why don't you try working out some other time of day, like in the morning? I go jogging with a couple of my neighbors three mornings a week. It's great. You should come out with us.

Julian: What time do you get up for that?

Roger: About 5:30.

Julian: Oh, no. You can count me out, mate.

Talking about fitness and health

2 Are you in shape or out of shape?

Derek is in great shape and does all the right things to stay physically fit. He works out regularly at a gym, lifting weights and doing cardiovascular exercises, such as running and swimming. Derek is also careful about his diet. He eats nutritious foods that are low in fat and calories. He takes daily vitamins and drinks a lot of water. He tries to get eight hours of sleep every night. He also goes to the doctor for annual check-ups.

Sam is totally out of shape. He has a sedentary job and doesn't do anything to improve his health. He never goes to the gym. Any kind of strenuous activity, such as walking up stairs, wears him out. Sam loves to eat rich, unhealthy foods. As a result, he's overweight. He doesn't sleep well, and most of the time he doesn't feel very well. He knows what his doctor would tell him, so he has avoided having a physical for several years.

3 Health DOs and DON'Ts

DOs

- Eat fruits and vegetables, whole grain cereals and breads, chicken, fish, and lean meats.
- Drink plenty of water.

- Have a regular exercise routine.
- Engage in cardiovascular exercise (walking, jogging, swimming) and strength training (weight-lifting, sit-ups, pull-ups).
- Get plenty of sleep.
- Meditate.
- Get regular physical exams.

DON'Ts

- Eat fatty or processed foods.
- Drink more than one alcoholic or caffeinated drink per day.
- Snack excessively between meals.
- Go to bed on a full stomach.
- Start a new exercise regimen without getting professional advice first.
- Do only one type of exercise.
- Avoid stairs or long walks.
- Forget to take breaks when you work.
- Put off seeing a doctor because you're too busy.

8 Is a vegetarian diet healthier?

People are attracted to vegetarianism for a number of reasons: because it seems healthier, because they believe it is more ethical than a meat-based diet that relies on the killing of animals, or simply because, to many young people, it's "cool."

In fact, we know that people in the industrialized world consume too much saturated fat, which comes mainly from red meat and dairy products and that they don't eat enough fruits and vegetables. Research has shown that eating a well-balanced vegetarian diet can lower the risk of heart disease, cancer, obesity, and diabetes.

So would most people be better off if they became vegetarians? The answer is not a simple one. While many people agree that vegetarianism can be a healthy approach to eating, a vegetarian diet needs to be planned more carefully than a meat-based diet. Otherwise, people following such a diet may not obtain all the nutrients their bodies need. Vegans, vegetarians who eliminate all animal products from their diets, must take supplements containing Vitamins B12 and D, since these cannot be obtained from plant sources.

10 ON THE NET

When it comes to looking for health information on the Internet, the problem is not quantity — health-related Websites number in the thousands — It's quality. Finding a credible, accurate, up-to-date site that addresses your specific concern can be similar to the proverbial search for the needle in the haystack. Here are some essential questions to ask when searching the Web for health information:

- Does the site relate to your specific question? There are good, general-health Websites, but also many that deal with specific conditions or diseases, such as cancer, heart disease, and diabetes. You may be able to get better, more detailed information from a site that focuses on the condition you're researching.
- What is the source of the information? A university or government source probably has more balanced, less biased information than a commercial site that has an interest in convincing you to buy their particular treatment.
- Is the information reliable? This question relates to the source. Chances are, if the site references well-known and respected medical journals and authorities, it is more reliable than one that does not.
- Is the information up-to-date? Medical understanding and knowledge are in a constant state of change. New research findings are announced every day. New drugs reach the market every year. It's important that the sites you rely on contain the latest information available.

1 TALKING ABOUT PERSONAL BELIEFS

Lisa: Are you superstitious, Paul?

Paul: Me? No, not at all. I don't have a care in the world, knock on wood.

Lisa: How interesting. You said "knock on wood." See, you are superstitious.

Paul: I was joking. People say that all the time without really believing it will have any effect.

Lisa: What about Friday the 13th? Are you ever nervous about doing something, say, traveling, on that day?

Paul: Of course not. Naturally when I travel, I try not to walk under ladders, but that's only common sense, don't you think?

Lisa: Oh, you're pulling my leg. Come on, admit it. You must be superstitious about some things. I think everyone is a little bit.

Paul: Well, I don't believe in ghosts, or monsters, or little green men, if that's what you mean — Wait! What was that?

Lisa: Oh, stop it, Paul!

- Actually, I do. You're in luck.
- Did you hear that Steven won $10,000 in Las Vegas?
- That guy has all the luck.
- Have you heard? Susan just got engaged!
- So who's the lucky guy?

NEGATIVE CONNOTATION

- Do you have any seats left for the Clapton concert?
- Sorry, you're out of luck.
- Things aren't going well for Tom.
- That poor guy has been down on his luck for ages.
- I'm sorry, Scott, but I need you here during the holidays.
- Lucky me.

4 Look! Up in the sky!

People have been gazing at the night sky for thousands of years ... and seeing things they couldn't explain for just as many. The term UFO — Unidentified Flying Object — is what we call anything that cannot be identified with certainty. Also known as flying saucers, UFOs are typically described as large, disk-shaped spaceships that come from somewhere in outer space. Years ago, people were certain that place was Mars. High-powered telescopes and other advances in astronomy have weakened that theory.

Most reported UFOs are eventually identified as military aircraft, shooting stars, and the like, but others remain unsolved mysteries. UFOs have "appeared" to people all over the world. And while skeptics doubt they exist, they are a phenomenon that won't go away.

8 Mythical creatures past and present

Dragons are fire-breathing monsters with huge, dinosaur-like bodies, wings, and deadly claws. In the West, dragons are considered evil and dangerous, but to the Chinese, they symbolize good luck.

Leprechauns are mischievous Irish fairies who look like small, bearded, old men. Leprechauns are guardians of hidden treasure, often a pot of gold. They can bring good or bad luck, but they can never be trusted because of their penchant for playing tricks on people.

Looking like white horses with a single horn projecting from their foreheads, unicorns flourished in the imaginations of Europeans in the Middle Ages. These mythical creatures were a symbol of purity.

The Loch Ness Monster is a creature with a huge, dark body and a long neck that is believed to live deep in the waters of Loch Ness, a lake in Scotland.

The Abominable Snowman is a hairy, ape-like creature with a face like a human being. The creature has reportedly been seen by visitors to remote areas of the Himalayas.

Aliens are creatures from outer space that come to Earth in flying saucers. They are also commonly known as men from Mars and little green men.

9 The monster in the lake

Stories about strange creatures living in the lakes of Scotland go back at least 1,500 years. According to early folklore, "water horses" or "kelpies" lived in many of the streams and lakes of the region. These were magical but dangerous creatures that sometimes lured small children into the water, never to be seen again.

The modern legend of the Loch Ness Monster, or "Nessie," as it is sometimes called, began in the 1930s. After a road was built along the north shore of the lake giving a clear view of the water, several sightings occurred and media interest became intense. In April 1933, a couple driving along the road reported seeing a huge animal splashing on the surface and, later, people claimed they spotted the creature moving on land. London newspapers sent reporters to the lake to cover the story and a circus offered a reward of £20,000 to anyone who could capture the monster. After a few months with no new sightings and at least one proven hoax, the excitement eventually died down.

In 1987 an attempt was made to finally prove or disprove the monster's existence by scientific means. A string of ships outfitted with sonar equipment cruised the lake from end to end, followed by a faster ship that would be able to pursue any unusual signals once detected. Several signals of moving underwater objects registered on the sonar equipment, one of which was said to be the largest ever detected in fresh water. However, none could be tracked to its source.

No matter — the legend of the Loch Ness Monster refuses to die. According to one estimate, over 4,000 witnesses have reported seeing something like the large, hump-backed creature described in various accounts. Which makes one wonder: Can over 4,000 eyewitnesses, who have appeared to be normal, sensible people, be wrong?

10 Fish or foul?

Myths, legends, and tall tales have sprung up on the waters of many rivers, lakes, and oceans. Because of the unpredictability of their existence, the people in fishing communities have traditionally held many superstitions and believed many a fantastic story. Common superstitions among fisherfolk include —

- 🐟 Throw back the first fish you catch, and you'll be lucky the whole day of fishing.
- 🐟 It's bad luck to get married when the fish aren't biting.
- 🐟 A fish should always be eaten from the head-end to the tail.
- 🐟 If you count the number of fish you catch, you will catch no more that day.
- 🐟 It's bad luck to say the word "pig" or to have a pig on board ship while fishing at sea.

11 To wish upon a star

Superstitions find their source in our fears. Whether by tossing a coin into a fountain, blowing out birthday candles, or breaking a wishbone with a partner, we often express our hopes by making wishes. And if the depths of the sea hide our deepest fears, the bright lights of night are the keepers of our wishes:

Star light, star bright
First star I see tonight,
I wish I may, I wish I might
Have the wish I wish tonight.

ACTION MODULE 1 – ROLE CARD A

Canyoning

You are on an adventure vacation in Costa Rica. You have spent the past week sea-kayaking, hiking in the rain forest, and rafting with a wonderful group of people. Tomorrow is the last full day of your vacation. You've been going over your brochure of activities to plan an exciting finish to your trip. There are several activities for you to choose from: scuba diving, bird-watching, fishing, surfing, and even tree-climbing. All of these activities sound interesting, but your heart is set on a newer, more exciting sport that you heard about during your kayaking and rafting trips – canyoning. You learned that this is a combination of all the adventure sports you like most: hiking, climbing, and then rappelling into remote river canyons. But the sport is fairly new and recommended only for highly skilled hikers and climbers. There is no mention of canyoning in the brochure.

Call your tour guide and ask about the activities in the brochure that you haven't yet tried. Mention your interest in canyoning. There may be opportunities for this activity, even if your guide doesn't offer canyoning.

ACTION MODULE 2 – ROLE CARD A

An office faux pas

You work for a public relations firm. You have been working there for three months, and everything has been going well.

Recently you were asked to revise a report for a client. Your supervisor, who assigned you the project, is away on vacation. Yesterday, the Executive Vice President stopped by your office to see how the report was coming along. Having spent three days on it and knowing that you needed several more hours to finish, you said quite bluntly that it was in bad shape, that it was poorly written, and required serious restructuring. You told the VP that the earliest you could have the report ready would be the end of the day. The VP looked surprised, but said "It's a good thing we have you working on it." He then instructed you to fax it to his hotel in Chicago where he would be presenting it to the client. You worked all day to finish the report and faxed it late last night.

This morning, chatting with a colleague about the project, you learned that it was actually written by the Executive VP himself. You replay your conversation from the day before in your mind and now understand the VP's surprise at your blunt remarks. Your only comfort is that the VP will be traveling on business all week. Maybe by the time he returns, he will have forgotten some of your criticisms.

Your phone is ringing. Answer it.

ACTION MODULE 1 – ROLE CARD B

Canyoning

You are a tour operator in Costa Rica, specializing in adventure tours. You help travelers plan their daily activities. You also lead groups in outdoor adventures, such as rock-climbing, scuba diving, rafting, sea-kayaking, and hiking.

You enjoy working with interesting people from all over the world. You love adventure and are always up for a new challenge. The relatively new sport of canyoning, largely unknown until the 1990s, is your newest passion. The sport combines hiking, climbing, and rappelling in beautiful, often unexplored, river canyons. It is exciting for you to introduce this sport to other outdoor adventurers; however, few visitors to your country are up to the physical and mental challenges of this sport.

Your supervisor has recently allowed you to take small groups of three on canyoning excursions, but the sport is not yet listed in your official brochure of activities. You have two people signed up for a canyoning trip tomorrow morning, but unless you find a third, you will have to cancel.

Your phone is ringing. Answer it.

ACTION MODULE 2 – ROLE CARD B

An office faux pas

You are the Executive Vice President of a large public relations firm. You recently wrote a report for a new client. You had very little time to work on it. Having many more important matters to attend to, you passed the report on to one of your senior analysts for revision. You know that the analyst left for vacation shortly thereafter and gave the assignment to a recently hired analyst.

You spoke to the analyst yesterday, because you need the report tomorrow for a meeting with a client in Chicago. The analyst was hard at work on it and gave you a very blunt opinion of the report. She said that it was in bad shape, that it was very poorly written, and required serious restructuring. You realized immediately that the analyst didn't know that you were the author of the report. You chose not to react to the comments, so that the analyst could focus on the job, rather than be embarrassed at her faux pas.

As per your instructions, the analyst faxed the report to you at your hotel in Chicago last night. Upon reading it, you realize how improved it is. It's much clearer and easier to follow. You are grateful for the excellent revisions the analyst made and can easily forgive her bluntness from the day before. Call her and thank her for a job well done.

ACTION MODULE 3 - ROLE CARD A

Expensive apartment

You've recently moved to a new city. You need to find a place to live. Unfortunately, this is proving much more difficult than you had expected. You can't afford to live downtown, where a small apartment costs an average of $1500/month. You can't pay more than $1000/month. You are flexible with regard to location, but you don't want a long commute. You don't want to share an apartment.

The realty agent you're working with just called to say that very little is available for $1000. There is an apartment in the suburbs for that price, but your trip to work would take over an hour. A little closer to downtown, the agent found a basement studio for $1250.

You decide to contact an old friend who lives in town. The two of you once shared an apartment. Call your friend for some advice on the housing situation.

ACTION MODULE 4 - ROLE CARD A

Exercise dilemma

You've just gotten the results of your yearly physical. There were no major problems, but the doctor said that you should exercise a lot more. You dislike exercise. You don't enjoy going to gyms. You don't enjoy repeating the same moves in exercise classes.

During your university days, you did ballet, modern dance, and ballroom dancing. Ballroom dancing was your passion. You were in great shape then, and it was so much fun that you never thought of it as exercise. You wouldn't even know where to start looking for a place to dance now. And if you wanted to take lessons, you would need a partner.

You see a colleague in the office cafeteria, who appears extremely happy and excited. Ask your colleague what's new.

ACTION MODULE 5 - ROLE CARD A

Mystery illness

You are the CEO of a consulting firm. You are in a foreign country, trying to start a joint venture with a new partner. This evening you attended a business dinner with the potential partner, who recommended the restaurant's specialty, which you both enjoyed with a bottle of red wine. It was an enjoyable and productive evening. Your client has agreed to the partnership, and you will be meeting again tomorrow to discuss the details of the venture.

The only unpleasant aspect of the evening was the waiter, who behaved in a very strange way, giving you dirty looks whenever he served you. But you didn't let that spoil the success of the evening.

As you were leaving the restaurant, you got a terrible stomachache. Your partner felt fine, and he had eaten the exact same meal. Was it the water? You had been warned in guidebooks not to drink the tap water.

Your concerned partner helped you to your hotel room and left, promising to check on you in the morning. You're lying in bed, hoping the pain will subside. As you're drifting in and out of an uncomfortable sleep, the phone rings. Answer it.

ACTION MODULE 3 – ROLE CARD B

Expensive apartment

You live in a large, one-bedroom apartment in the downtown area. Your rent is $1800/month. You've been sharing the apartment with a good friend. The two of you divided the limited living space well and have managed to make the situation work. It helped that you always worked late and were hardly ever home during the week and that your housemate usually went away on weekends, giving you time alone in the apartment.

Recently your roommate decided to move. You need to find a housemate quickly, or you'll have to move out. You can't afford the high rent on your own. You are nervous about sharing the place with a stranger. Your phone is ringing. Answer it.

ACTION MODULE 4 – ROLE CARD B

Exercise dilemma

You have a unique hobby: ballroom dancing. You've been taking lessons at a local dance studio for several years. Last month you were invited to join the studio dance team, which competes with other dance studios in the country. You've been paired with a great partner. You've spent the past several weeks practicing together, and tonight you will compete for the first time. You are nervous, but very excited about the competition.

You're at work now. You've discussed this hobby very little with people in your office, since you think most of your colleagues would find it odd. There is one person you would like to share your news with. This colleague used to be a dancer and may find your news interesting. You might even invite your colleague to the competition. Here is your colleague now. Share your news.

ACTION MODULE 5 – ROLE CARD B

Mystery illness

You are negotiating a joint venture with the CEO of a foreign consulting firm. This evening you attended a business dinner with your potential partner. You recommended the restaurant's specialty, which you both enjoyed with a bottle of red wine. It was an enjoyable and productive evening. You and your guest have reached agreement on the partnership. You will be meeting again tomorrow to discuss the details.

Unfortunately, the evening ended on a sour note. Your guest became quite sick to the stomach as you were leaving the restaurant. That seemed odd, since you both ate the same meal, and you didn't feel ill at all.

Suddenly it occurs to you. It was the waiter! You saw him giving your guest strange looks. You're sure he was giving him the evil eye. This happened to you once. A colleague was envious of your success, and he put a curse on you that resulted in a sudden illness.

You recall your grandmother's remedy: Take a glass of water and drop burning matches into it. If the ashes float, then it is, indeed, the curse of the evil eye; and the victim must drink the water with the ash to eliminate the curse. Call your new partner at his hotel and suggest the remedy. Offer to go to the hotel and help him undo the curse.

Your Turn

- 1 A: Tell the class about an exotic destination to which you have traveled or to which you would like to travel. How did you learn about this place? What made you interested in it? What makes the destination exotic?
- B: Ask a classmate what type of travel he prefers. Does he enjoy city tours in the comforts of civilization, or does he prefer adventure tours to remote areas? Ask him to describe a trip he has taken in detail. If it was a city tour, ask what type of museums, restaurants, and galleries he visited. If it was an adventure tour, ask him to describe the activities he did during the trip. Report your findings to the class.
- 2 A: Tell the class about your most embarrassing moment on the job. How did it happen? Who was involved? Was it quickly forgotten, or did your colleagues continue to tease you about it for a long time?
- B: Ask a classmate if she has ever made a faux pas while traveling or doing business in a foreign country. Then ask if she's ever witnessed a visitor to her country making a faux pas. Ask her to describe either incident or both. Report your findings to the class.
- 3 A: Tell the class about a concern you have about the city or town where you live. Describe the problem in detail. Then propose a solution to the problem.
- B: Ask a classmate to describe his commute to work. Does he walk? Does he drive or carpool? If yes, is there a lot of traffic? Does he take the train? If yes, are the trains crowded? How long is his commute? How expensive? Report your findings to the class.
- 4 A: Tell the class about your favorite forms of exercise. How often do you exercise? Do you think you exercise enough? How do you usually feel after working out? What are the principal benefits you gain from exercise?
- B: Ask a classmate about her eating habits. What types of food does she typically eat? Does she consider herself healthy? If she could change something about her diet, what would it be? Why? Report your findings to the class.
- 5 A: Tell the class about some common superstitions in your culture. Describe one superstition in detail. Is there anything one can do to protect oneself or guard against this superstition? Do you believe in this superstition?
- B: Ask a classmate if he is ever superstitious or if he believes that there is a logical explanation for everything that happens to us. Ask him if anything has ever happened to him that he couldn't explain. Ask him to describe the incident. Report your findings to the class.

CHAPTER 1 – ROLE CARD A

Difficult changes

You are part of a marketing team in a large corporation. You have worked there for five years and have been very happy in your position. The work you do is very much team-based, and you have always enjoyed the camaraderie of this type of setting. In the past year, however, there has been a big change in the team. Several new members have not successfully integrated into the group. One or two are particularly unproductive, forcing workers like yourself to do more in order for the work to get done. Two of the new team members are highly competitive and eager to take credit for work, even work that is not their own. This has created a level of mistrust that has never before existed among the group.

You have spoken to your manager about these issues several times. He has encouraged you to be patient and to give the group time to “connect.” He has promised to speak to the employees who are causing the problems. You are not sure if he has, but nothing has changed at all.

Recently, out of frustration, you applied for a job, got an interview, and very soon after received an offer of employment. The salary of this job would be a little lower than what you currently make, but at this point, money is not your primary concern.

While you are not happy to leave the company, after much thought, you have decided to take the job — for your health and peace of mind. Go inform your manager of this decision.

CHAPTER 2 – ROLE CARD A

A sure thing

You recently applied for the position of Export Sales Manager for a large company. The company has been recruiting applicants from your country as it is hoping to expand the sale of its products there. You have all the necessary qualifications for the position. You have an MBA and ten years' business operations experience. This would be a great move for your career.

Last week you had a second interview for the position. You felt that it went very well. In fact, it seemed more of a formality than anything else. After all, your CV speaks for itself. Most of your duties in the new position overlap very nicely with your current work. You are confident that you can do the job well. The more you've thought about it, the more it seems quite improbable that you would not be offered the job.

You e-mailed your interviewer to follow up on the interview immediately afterward. It's been almost a week since the second interview now, and you haven't heard anything back. You've decided to call the interviewer to find out if the company is ready to make you an offer.

CHAPTER 1 – ROLE CARD B

Difficult changes

You are a manager of a marketing team in a large corporation. The productivity of the group has suffered in the past few months, due to several personnel changes and the subsequent difficulty integrating new team members. It seems that a couple of strong personalities have damaged the chemistry of what was once a harmonious group. You've spoken to these employees, but the situation has not improved.

During research of training opportunities for your team you came across Outward Bound. You learned that Outward Bound trains teams in decision-making, risk-taking, conflict resolution, communication, leadership, trust, and change management through problem-solving exercises and wilderness excursions. You're desperate to turn things around for your group and think this might be just the solution. You proposed it to the CEO of the company last week. He agrees with the idea and has given you the go-ahead to set it up.

You're eager to inform your team about this special program. You especially can't wait to share this information with one member of your staff, who has been working very hard and has taken the group's problems particularly to heart. This employee is at your door now.

CHAPTER 2 – ROLE CARD B

A sure thing

You are the head of sales for a multi-national company that is looking to expand its product sales in a key market overseas. You've been interviewing applicants from that country for the position of Export Sales Manager. You interviewed eight different candidates. Of those, two have been identified as very strong candidates.

Of the two, one has become more of a question mark since the second interview took place last week. He is definitely the more qualified for the position, with ten years' operations experience and an MBA from an excellent program. On paper, he appears to be the perfect candidate.

After spending a good deal more time with the candidate during the second interview, you are beginning to have reservations. He was quiet and rather passive during the interview and answered your questions somewhat indifferently. He had not prepared any questions to ask you himself and did not appear to have a firm understanding of your company's products and services.

You parted company saying that you would call him as soon as you made your decision. The candidate e-mailed you last week, not to thank you for the interview, but to let you know he was prepared to accept the job. You did not respond to his e-mail, as you had not yet made a final decision. More and more you are leaning toward the other candidate, who has less experience, but is much more professional and personable.

Your phone is ringing. Answer it.

CHAPTER 3 – ROLE CARD A

Quality of life

You work as a senior scientist for a division of a major pharmaceutical company in a small town 100 km from the nearest city.

You own a beautiful house in a forested area. You know all your neighbors. Your commute consists of a pleasant, ten-minute bike ride on quiet, country roads. Living so close to work, you're able to spend a lot of time with your family. Some days you even go home for lunch. You have always been grateful for how balanced the personal and professional sides of life have been. You appreciate the clean air, the space, and the peacefulness of your town.

You have worked for your company for twenty years and have gradually moved up to your current position, which you've had for the past eight years. You hope that with your experience and long tenure with the company, you may soon qualify for the position of vice president. Such a promotion would be wonderful — professionally as well as financially, as your two children start applying to university in the next three years.

Your phone is ringing. Answer it.

CHAPTER 4 – ROLE CARD A

Fit as a fiddle

You have been working as an accountant for a successful firm for three years. You enjoy the work, despite the stress and long hours, and you deal well with the hectic nature of your job. You have a healthy lifestyle. You watch what you eat very carefully. You eat three meals a day, with few snacks. You spend your lunch hour at the gym near the office. You like to be in shape, and you find that the exercise gives you a healthier perspective on everything, including your work.

You saw your manager in the hallway earlier today and she said she has something important to tell you. You're hopeful that, because of your hard work and positive attitude, the company is ready to offer you a promotion.

Your phone is ringing. Answer it.

CHAPTER 5 – ROLE CARD A

That's not funny!

You're working late at the office. You're trying to finish a report that is due tomorrow. You know that one of your colleagues is also in his office, finishing up a presentation. No one else is in the building. It's so late that even the cleaning people have left.

Suddenly you hear a loud, thumping noise and the lights go on and off. It startles you and continues for about half a minute. At first, you are truly scared, but then you remember that your colleague is also in the building and is most certainly trying to play a trick on you. This colleague is known for office pranks. You pick up the phone, somewhat angrily, to call your colleague and yell at him for scaring you like that, especially tonight as you are under so much pressure to finish your report on time.

CHAPTER 3 – ROLE CARD B

Quality of life

You are the COO of a division of a major pharmaceutical company located in a small town 100 km from the nearest city. You've just come from an important meeting of the managers of the various company divisions. One of the key issues discussed was the need for a replacement for the vice president of the division in the capital city. The vice president there has recently resigned, and a replacement is needed as soon as possible. You immediately nominated the senior scientist on your staff, the ideal candidate, who has worked for your division for almost twenty years. He is a dedicated employee and deserves such an honor. The promotion would, of course, require him to move close to the capital, but you are confident that he will accept the position. As no other divisional manager could suggest as strong a candidate, it was unanimously decided to propose the job to your scientist.

Call the scientist right away to share the wonderful news.

CHAPTER 4 – ROLE CARD B

Fit as a fiddle

You are the manager of a successful accounting firm. You have a great team of hard-working employees, who consistently put in the extra hours the job often requires. You can see that the heavy workload is beginning to take a toll on some of your staff. It's obvious that few of them make time for their own health and well-being. You'd like to encourage a better diet and exercise among your staff, but are not sure how to go about it.

You have always liked the idea of having a gym on site for workers to go to during the lunch hour or after work. Unfortunately, this is not an option in the building where your offices are located. However, you've spoken to Human Resources and have managed to negotiate gym membership discounts for all employees if a minimum of 25 sign up.

You decide to team up with one of your workers — known as the office health nut — to help to launch this "crusade." You know this colleague works out daily and follows a strict diet. Surely, this employee will have insight to give to your staff. Earlier today, you saw this employee and mentioned that there was something important you wanted to discuss. Call your employee and share your ideas.

CHAPTER 5 – ROLE CARD B

That's not funny!

You're working late at the office. You're trying to finish a presentation that is due tomorrow. You know that one of your colleagues is also in his office, finishing up a report. No one else is in the building. It's so late that even the cleaning people have left.

Suddenly you hear a loud, thumping noise and the lights go on and off. It startles you and continues for about half a minute. At first, you are truly scared, but then you remember that your colleague is also in the building and is most certainly trying to play a trick on you. This colleague is known for office pranks. Your phone is now ringing. Of course, it's your colleague, calling to laugh about the joke. Answer the phone and give your colleague a piece of your mind for playing games when you're under so much pressure.

CHAPTER 1

Adjective formation: noun + suffix = adjective

- The suffixes -y and -ous can be added to some nouns to create adjectives: rock + -y = rocky; sand + -y = sandy; grass + -y = grassy; etc. mountain + -ous = mountainous; adventure + -ous = adventurous; etc.

- Most adverbs of location can also be used as prepositions.
- The difference is that a preposition must be followed by a noun or a pronoun, whereas an adverb of location usually appears at the end of the sentence (after the main verb or after the object).

preposition: The sun was above the mountains. We traveled 60 meters below sea level.

adverb of location: We looked at the sun above. We admired the beautiful fish below.

CHAPTER 2

Modifying comparisons: adverbs of degree

- Adverbs of degree can precede adjectives and other adverbs in the comparative form to strengthen or weaken the degree of difference:

Examples: My new job is more demanding than my last one.

My new job is a little more demanding than my last one. (small difference)

My new job is a lot more demanding than my last one. (big difference)

- Some adverbs and adverbial phrases convey a big difference: a lot, considerably, significantly; while others convey a small difference: a little, slightly, somewhat.

Reflexive pronouns: review

AS COMPLEMENTS TO VERBS AND VERB PHRASES: Reflexive pronouns are used after verbs when the action of the sentence reflects back to the subject: She admired herself in the mirror. The subject and object are one person.

FOR EMPHASIS / AS AN INTENSIFIER: Reflexive pronouns also can be used to emphasize the subject of the sentence. They can appear at the end of a sentence: Ashley could not finish the project herself. Or they can appear immediately following the subject: I myself would never buy such expensive shoes.

CHAPTER 3

Tag questions

- A question tag (e.g.: aren't you? doesn't she?) is placed at the end of a statement to elicit agreement.
- An affirmative statement takes a negative tag and anticipates an affirmative answer:
 - You want the report today, don't you? – Yes, I do.
 - We've made a lot of progress, haven't we? – Yes, we have.
- A negative statement takes an affirmative tag and anticipates a negative answer:
 - Rita hasn't arrived yet, has she? – No, she hasn't.
 - You can't be here by 4:00, can you? – No, I can't.

get – the all-purpose verb

- The verb get combined with prepositions and adverbs produces a variety of meanings. For example:

get to: arrive at

Call me when you get to work.

get down: descend, move downward

She couldn't get down the fire escape.

- The word get is also used in numerous verb phrases. Such phrasal verbs are formed with get + particle. The resulting verb phrase has a different meaning from the original verb. Some common phrasal verbs with get: get ahead (make progress); get ahead of (pass; surpass); get along with (be on good terms with); get away (escape); get over (recover); get out of (exit); get through (complete); get through to (contact)

CHAPTER 4

Subjunctive

- The present subjunctive is used to convey an order, request or intention: I suggested that he work harder.
- It is commonly used after specific verbs: The manager asked that Lynn be on time every day. Other verbs followed by subjunctive: demand, insist, propose, recommend, request, suggest.
- The subjunctive is also commonly used after specific adjectives: It is + adjective: It is crucial that Jeremy finish the report by tomorrow. Other adjectives followed by subjunctive: best, desirable, essential, important, imperative.
- For verbs other than be, the present subjunctive can only be distinguished from the present tense indicative in the third person singular.

Words with -ever

- Words ending in -ever, such as whatever, whoever, whichever, however, whenever, introduce dependent clauses, which provide more information about subjects or verbs: Mae smiles whenever Bob gives her a present. Whoever borrowed the equipment had better return it soon. John told me to take whatever I need.

CHAPTER 5

be + adjective + preposition

- Some adjectives can be followed by a preposition (e.g., nervous about, jealous of).
- The be + adjective + preposition construction can be followed by a noun (Mary was nervous about the presentation.) or a noun phrase (Brian is jealous of my new office.).
- This construction can also be followed by a verb, but the verb must be in the gerund form: Tim is excited about starting his new job.

Exclamations with What ...! and How ...!

- Exclamations are used to express an emotion about something: What a beautiful sunset! How horrible!
- Formation:

What + (adjective) + noun	How + (adjective)
What a day!	How funny!
What a long day!	How tiring!
- Such exclamations typically end with an exclamation point.

CHAPTER 1

ACTIVITY 1 | TRACK 1

- Have you and Daniel decided where you're going on your honeymoon?
- As a matter of fact, we have. We made reservations at a hotel in Key Largo, Florida. We'll stay there for a couple of nights, and then we're going to disappear underwater.
- What do you mean disappear?
- We're going to spend three nights in an underwater inn.
- An underwater inn? You're joking, right?
- No, I'm serious. They've got a small hotel 21 feet below sea level down there. You can scuba-dive all day long, or you can hang out in your room and watch the fish go by. And if you want to be pampered a little, you can hire a "mer-chef" to prepare gourmet meals for you.
- Wow. That sounds so interesting and ... different. I've never heard of such a thing.
- Neither had we until one of our scuba-diving friends told us about it. Since we both love the ocean so much, we thought: Why not?

ACTIVITY 13 | TRACK 2 | A

... wasn't my idea; it was Jeff's. But I'm glad I went ... Cold, dark, and damp, but really interesting. You'd be surprised how many creatures live down there ... Salamanders, insects, thousands of bats ... Yeah, a little spooky, but I handled ...

TRACK 3 | B

Yeah, actually, I did go over once ... Freezing! But they pulled me out pretty fast ... Incredible scenery — when you have time to look ... some of the most beautiful parts of the Grand Canyon ...

TRACK 4 | C

It's really slow-going because it's almost straight up ... We were attached to the pitons by ropes, but it still feels as though one false step would spell doom ... A little scary, but more of a rush of adrenaline, really ... Oh, yeah, amazing views from up there — you can see for miles around ...

TRACK 5 | D

Beautiful. All the brightly colored fish ... The barrier reef off the coast of Australia ... No, no sharks, at least not where we were ...

CHAPTER 2

ACTIVITY 1 | TRACK 6

- My company is sending me to Argentina and Brazil next week to meet with some of our clients. Do you have any tips on how to act — you know, appropriate behavior? This is my first time there, and I don't want to embarrass anybody — including myself.
- Well, South Americans are very friendly and warm, but they dress and behave a little less casually than we do here. You know, Americans are considerably less formal than people in most other countries.
- I've heard that people there don't like to talk about business when they first meet you — that they'd rather wait to get to know you a little bit first. Is that true?
- Yes, it is. If you're invited for dinner or a social gathering, don't bring up business until you sense the time is right.
- OK, but how will I know when that is?
- Well, you'll definitely know if the host brings up the subject himself!

ACTIVITY 8 | TRACK 7 | Sonia

I went to a client's office to give a presentation on the services we offer. I was new, and although I had participated in the presentation before, it was the first time I was actually delivering it myself. I had called the client a few days in advance to find out if I would be able to connect to our Website through their network. They said that sellers do it all the time. Well, wouldn't you know, the day I went there, they were having network trouble. Since I was counting on their Internet connection, I hadn't downloaded any of the files that I needed to show during the presentation. Oh, was I embarrassed. I had to drop the multi-media presentation altogether and ended up passing out a few documents describing the company and its services. I came across as a complete amateur. I learned my lesson after that disaster.

TRACK 8 | Takeo

My most awkward moment at work had to be when I moved to our office in Hamburg a few years ago. I had worked with my colleagues there very closely for several months — by e-mail and by phone, of course. I had gotten to know their voices and, as usually happens, I had created a mental image of the ones I spoke to most often. Well, one of the people I worked with fairly closely was the vice president of operations for our European division. When I arrived at the offices there, I was taken to meet her. It just so happened that she was standing outside her office with her assistant. The assistant looked so professional and important — it's just the way she was dressed and how she carried herself. I started to say, "Hello, you must be ..." But she had a horrified look in her eyes, and the woman standing next to her had an annoyed look in her eyes. I realized right away the mistake I had made. That was very awkward.

TRACK 9 | Michael

My most embarrassing moment happened years ago. I actually hung up on my best friend's boss. I was unemployed for several months that year, and my friend was trying to help me get a job. He gave my CV to the head of the distribution department and put in a good word for me. Weeks later, during an election period, the director of distribution decided to call me. Unluckily for me, I'd received three or four calls that morning from people representing different political candidates. I was getting annoyed. So the fifth time the phone rang, I picked up the phone and shouted, "I can't vote; I just got out of prison!" Twenty minutes later my friend called and asked what was wrong with me. He said his boss didn't think my joke was very funny. Needless to say, I didn't get that job.

TRACK 10 | Elena

Oh, I really made a fool of myself last month. I was one of several people scheduled to participate in an international conference call. I was slated to present some information to the group about halfway through the call. I forgot all about the meeting. I heard later that every ten minutes or so, Edward, the fellow who was leading the call, would ask: "Has Elena joined us yet?" Later that day, Edward gave me an earful. I deserved it.

CHAPTER 3

ACTIVITY 1 | TRACK 11

- Do you live close to the office, Alberto?
- No. Unfortunately I live way out in the suburbs about thirty miles from here.
- How long is your commute?
- It depends on the traffic. The morning trip is usually easier. If I leave my house by 7:00, I can get in by 8:00. In the evenings, the traffic can be really awful. A couple of times, it's taken me more than two hours to get home.
- Why don't you move closer to work?
- You know, when we were looking for a house, we tried to find something closer, but everything near the city was much more expensive. So we decided to buy the place in Oakton and put up with a longer commute.
- That's the trade-off, isn't it? Live close and pay —

- Or live farther away and drive.

ACTIVITY 5 | TRACK 12 | Brian

Five years ago, I took a job about forty miles outside the city. At the time, my wife and I thought it would be better to live closer to the job. So we moved out to the suburbs. Well, we only lasted a year there. We got tired of having to drive everywhere. In the city, we can walk to restaurants, movies, the grocery store — pretty much everything we need is within walking distance from our apartment. Of course, now that we're back in the city, I'm stuck with the long commute to work, but at least it's a "reverse" commute.

TRACK 13 | Liza

As a single woman, safety is a big concern for me. I lead a pretty active life. I go out with friends a lot, and I take part in many of the cultural events in town. But I have to say that there are times when I wonder if I would be wiser to live outside the city. I have these thoughts sometimes when I'm walking home by myself after dark or when I'm out jogging early in the morning. Several of my friends have dogs and have suggested I get one. But my apartment is small, and I'm not home enough to really take care of a dog. Of course, if I moved out of the city, I'd be spending a lot more time on the road, driving to work and coming in for events on the weekend. I suspect that I wouldn't see my friends quite as much as I do now. And that would bother me. I guess you could say that I'm on the fence about city living versus the suburban life.

TRACK 14 | Jim

It's hard for me to be objective about the pros and cons of city living and suburban living. I've lived in the same city all my life. I've been to the suburbs many times, of course, but that's not the same as living there. I guess I'll find out soon enough. My wife, Sheila, and I have decided to try life on the other side. We're moving out to the suburbs in the spring. Sheila and I both think living in the city gives you an edge. You're more suspicious of people, you become pushy — like everyone else around you — more aggressive. Life in the city is just so intense: the noise, the bustle, the movement. It just never stops, at least not in this city. Our friends think we're going to go crazy twiddling our thumbs in suburbia. I think it's going to be great to be able to read a book without being interrupted by car alarms, loud radios, shouting in the streets, sirens ... Who knows, I might finally get a good night's sleep for the first time in my life.

TRACK 15 | Naomi

The thing that bothers me the most in the city is the dirtiness and the litter. People don't seem to care about where they put their rubbish. There are signs all over the place warning that litterers will be fined, but that doesn't seem to stop anybody. I'm not sure what can be done about it. Maybe we should have more rubbish bins on street corners and paint them yellow to make them really obvious. Would that make a difference? I don't know. I travel a lot on business. Sometimes I visit cities that are so clean and so pretty. It's obvious that the people who live there are proud of their city. When the streets are clean, shop owners try harder to keep the pavements in front of their stores neat and tidy. And so do the residents. Everything just looks so much better. And as a visitor, these cities feel so welcoming and friendly. I wish it felt that way in my town.

CHAPTER 4

ACTIVITY 1 | TRACK 16

- I am so out of shape.
- What do you mean "out of shape"? You look pretty fit to me.
- Unfortunately, scales don't know how to lie. I've gained a lot of weight since I started at Spectrum last October. I work late, I eat out most nights — the restaurant meals are killing me.
- What about exercise? Don't you exercise regularly?
- I used to be in the gym four nights a week, but I've let that slip. When you leave work at 8:00, 8:30, it's hard to get motivated to exercise.
- Why don't you try working out some other time of day, like in the morning? I go jogging with a couple of my neighbors three mornings a week. It's great. You should come out with us.
- What time do you get up for that?
- About 5:30.
- 5:30? You can count me out, mate.

ACTIVITY 6 | TRACK 17

- I'm really confused, Michelle. I'd like to go on a diet and lose some weight, but there are so many fad diets out there — high-protein diets, high-carbohydrate diets, fruit diets, soup diets ...
- I know, Brenda. I've tried a couple myself. Whichever one I tried, I'd lose some weight, but then put it back on as soon as I stopped dieting. I suggest you forget about those fad diets, and try something else.
- Like what?
- Start eating well for the long term. That means a well-balanced diet, with everything in it — including desserts. Not too many, of course. Plenty of fruit and vegetables, plenty of protein, but not too much fat. That means more chicken and fish and less red meat.

- That sounds great, but it's pretty much how I eat now. How do you cut down the calories and lose weight when you're already eating right?
- The secret ingredient in my diet is exercise. I find the only way I can lose weight is to exercise an hour every day.
- But doesn't exercise make you hungrier?
- Actually, no. Just the opposite. After a good work-out, I usually eat much less. That's why I try to exercise an hour or two before dinner.

ACTIVITY 9 | TRACK 18 | Nick

- Have you gotten the results from your physical yet? How did it turn out?
- Well, there was some good news and some bad news. The good news is that, overall, my health is pretty good. My blood pressure was fine — 120 over 80. All the tests my doctor ran were negative.
- And the bad news?
- My cholesterol level is too high.
- You know, they have medicines that are really effective at lowering cholesterol. Did your doctor recommend that you take one?
- He offered it as an option, but I'd rather not. I'd like to see if I can make some lifestyle changes to get my cholesterol level down.
- Like what? Eat less meat, more fruits and vegetables?
- For starters. The doctor suggested I eat more high-fiber foods and fewer fried foods. And, of course, he said that I need to exercise more.

TRACK 19 | Paula

- You look pale, Paula, are you feeling OK?
- I've been so tired lately. I finally went to my doctor yesterday, and she told me what was going on.
- Anything serious?
- Well, I have an iron deficiency. She said that's why I have so little energy.
- How did this happen?
- You remember that for the past few months I've been working a lot, not sleeping enough, and eating whatever I could grab on the run?
- Uh-huh.
- Well, I'm paying for it now.
- What did your doctor suggest?
- According to her, it's very simple: Slow down. Eat more regular meals and increase the amount of red meat and liver in my diet, neither of which I particularly like.

- Did she give you any other options?
- Yes, actually, I can take iron supplements, but I would need to combine that with vitamin C. The doctor assured me that if I follow her advice I should start having my old energy level back again soon.
- I'm glad to hear that. The difficult part for you is going to be to slow down, isn't it?

CHAPTER 5

ACTIVITY 1 | TRACK 20

- Are you superstitious, Paul?
- Me? No, not at all. I don't have a care in the world, knock on wood.
- How interesting. You said "knock on wood." See, you are superstitious.
- I was joking. People say that all the time without really believing it will have any effect.
- What about Friday the 13th? Are you ever nervous about doing something, say, travelling, on that day?
- Of course not. Naturally when I travel, I try not to walk under ladders, but that's only common sense, don't you think?
- Oh, you're pulling my leg. Come on, admit it. You must be superstitious about some things. I think everyone is a little bit.
- Well, I don't believe in ghosts, or monsters, or little green men, if that's what you mean — Wait! What was that?
- Oh, stop it, Paul!

PRACTICE: CHAPTER 1

EXERCISE 2 | TRACK 21 | One

Listen to each traveler describe a recent vacation. Check the appropriate box or boxes that describe the vacation.

It rained throughout our hike. The mountain was muddy, and it became very difficult to climb. But we kept going, and when we reached the top, the sun came out.

TRACK 22 | Two

What an interesting country. I started my holiday in the capital, enjoying the culture and the amazing food. Then I hiked through the countryside and explored several historic castles.

TRACK 23 | Three

I went camel-trekking in the desert. I must admit I was a bit scared at first, but once I got used to riding the camel, it was exciting. I've never seen such beautiful sites.

TRACK 24 | Four

The architecture was breathtaking. We walked all day, exploring every corner of the city. I took over two hundred photos. The people there were very friendly and hospitable.

TRACK 25 | Five

We spent seven days on a remote beach. It was so relaxing, lying on the sand, looking up at the clear, blue sky with the palm trees swaying around us.

EXERCISE 8 | TRACK 26 | One

Listen to each sentence and then choose the best response.

We saw some of the most amazing marine life.

TRACK 27 | Two

I went bird-watching in the rain forest.

TRACK 28 | Three

Then the kayak flipped over, and I lost my paddle!

TRACK 29 | Four

It takes incredible hand and finger strength to climb some of those rocks.

TRACK 30 | Five

We slept in igloos that we built ourselves. It was surprisingly warm inside.

PRACTICE: CHAPTER 2

EXERCISE 1 | TRACK 31 | One

Listen to each question and select the best response.

At what point during dinner should I talk business?

TRACK 32 | Two

What should I wear to the dinner tomorrow?

TRACK 33 | Three

What did I do wrong? Why was he offended?

TRACK 34 | Four

What an awful presentation! I completely embarrassed myself in front of my clients.

TRACK 35 | Five

Is it appropriate etiquette to ask about my client's family?

EXERCISE 7 | TRACK 36 | One

Listen to the people describe the dress code in their offices. Check the correct box.

In our office, men don't even take off their jackets or loosen their ties.

TRACK 37 | Two

We can wear anything we want to the office — within reason, of course.

TRACK 38 | Three

If you wear jeans, you'll probably be sent home to change into something more professional.

TRACK 39 | Four

All the women at our company wear suits and stylish shoes.

TRACK 40 | Five

I dress neatly, but I never wear a suit or a tie to work.

TRACK 41 | Six

All the men in our company wear conservative, tailored suits.

PRACTICE: CHAPTER 3

EXERCISE 1 | TRACK 42

Listen to the couple talk about their decision to move from the city to the suburbs. List the pros and cons they mention.

- Living way out in the suburbs won't be easy, you know. We're going to have a miserably long commute.
- I know, but the kids will have a yard to play in, and we'll finally have enough room to get a dog.
- And I'll be able to plant that garden I've always dreamed of.
- I'm going to miss being so close to the museums and theaters and the wonderful restaurants.
- I know. But one thing I definitely won't miss is our ridiculously high rent.
- And for such a tiny apartment. At least now we'll be getting some space for what we're paying.
- I just hope the kids will adjust to the new school quickly. I know they're going to miss their friends in the city.
- They'll be fine, don't worry. We'll all adjust in time.

EXERCISE 5 | TRACK 43 | One

Listen to each sentence and choose the correct response.

Wasn't that man at the back of the line?

TRACK 44 | Two

Were you in an elevator during the blackout?

TRACK 45 | Three

Have you finished reading the report?

TRACK 46 | Four

Did April's coworkers like her?

TRACK 47 | Five

Luis seems to know everybody in this business.

PRACTICE: CHAPTER 4

EXERCISE 2 | TRACK 48

Listen to Jack and his wife Libby discuss their day. Make a list of the negative aspects of their lifestyles that you hear in their conversation.

- Hi, honey, how was work today?
- Miserable. I am so stressed out and exhausted. I had to have five cups of coffee to get me through the day.
- That's not good. You shouldn't go to bed so late.
- I know, but when I go to bed earlier I just can't fall asleep.
- Maybe you should call Dr. Hirsch.
- I can't deal with one more thing on my schedule right now. I'll call her in a few weeks.
- Well, what about taking some short breaks at work. I find it relaxing to take a walk around the block to clear my mind when the stress starts to build up.
- Are you kidding? I don't have any time for breaks. But enough about me. How was your day?
- Well, I went to the gym with some guys from work. We lifted weights.
- You lifted weights?! With your back?! You're the one who's going to need a doctor.
- Don't worry; I'm OK. I just did the exercises that the other guys did. They know what they're doing.
- If you say so. It's good that you're exercising again, though.
- Well, I had to start sometime. I'm so out of shape I don't even use the stairs anymore. What time is it anyway?
- It's 10:00. What should we do for dinner?
- Let's just order pizza again.
- Sounds good to me.

EXERCISE 7 | TRACK 49 | One

Listen to the speakers and complete the statements.

I had to run to catch the bus this morning. I was so tired, I was afraid I was going to pass out!

TRACK 50 | Two

The hardest thing is starting an exercise program. Once it becomes part of your routine, it's not so bad.

TRACK 51 | Three

The doctor told me my cholesterol level is high.

TRACK 52 | Four

These cafeteria meals are killing me. I've gained 15 pounds since I started eating here regularly.

TRACK 53 | Five

I eat a lot of high-fiber foods and not many fried foods.

TRACK 54 | Six

I tried to stop eating meat when I was in high school, but that didn't last very long.

PRACTICE: CHAPTER 5

EXERCISE 2 | TRACK 55 | One

Listen to each dialogue. Decide if the expressions with the words luck and lucky have a positive or a negative connotation. Then check the correct box.

- Have I missed Flight 58 to Zurich?
- You're in luck. It was delayed. It's leaving in fifteen minutes. You can still make it if you hurry to the gate.

TRACK 56 | Two

- Did you hear that Jonathan just got engaged?
- Really? So who's the lucky girl?

TRACK 57 | Three

- I need to see Mr. Johnson. Is he still here?
- Oh, you're really out of luck. He just left, and he's going to be on vacation all next week.

TRACK 58 | Four

- Not only do I have to drive five hours to the conference, I have to give three presentations.
- Lucky you!

TRACK 59 | Five

- Did you hear that Dana got a promotion? They're going to give her the corner office.
- That Dana has all the luck.

TRACK 60 | Six

- I lost my wallet yesterday, and a week ago my car was stolen.
- You poor guy, you've really been down on your luck lately.

EXERCISE 5 | TRACK 61 | One

Listen to each statement and choose the best response.

I want to see the Loch Ness Monster when I go to Scotland.

TRACK 62 | Two

I think I may have seen a Martian last night.

TRACK 63 | Three

Have you ever wished upon a star?

TRACK 64 | Four

Can a pet turtle bring bad luck?

TRACK 65 | Five

Have you ever tossed a coin into a fountain?

TRACK 66 | Six

Let's count all the fish we've caught.
